Pioneers Of European Integration And Peace, 1945-1963: A Brief History With Documents (Bedford Series In History & Culture)

Synopsis

After the devastation of the Second World War, Western European leaders worked together to achieve what had eluded their predecessors after World War I: a lasting peace. Between 1945 and 1963, visionary men such as France's Jean Monnet and Robert Schuman, Belgium's Paul-Henri Spaak, and West Germany's Konrad Adenauer laid the foundation for the creation of the European Union. In so doing, they inaugurated what has been a sixty-year period of peace and increasing cooperation among nations that had engaged each other repeatedly in warfare. Sherrill Brown Wells's collection of primary documents takes students through the evolution of European integration in the critical early years. Her cogent introduction describes the thinking and motivations of the most influential pioneers of European integration. Document headnotes, a glossary of acronyms and key figures, a chronology, questions for consideration, and a selected bibliography offer additional pedagogical support.

Wells covers the 20 years after World War 2, when a fragile western Europe managed to patch up its historical enmities under a guidance of a few statesmen like Monnet and Adenauer. The documents show the core of this, with a rapprochement between France and West Germany. A tentative arrangement at first. But one that led to the Treaty of Rome and the European Economic Community. The choice of documents is well done. The reader gets a good sense of the historical flow of events.
